BIOGRAPHICAL/HISTORICAL NOTE

The World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition was held during the winter and spring of 1884 and 1885 in New Orleans, Louisiana. The Exposition was largely the idea of three men: Major Edward A. Burke, the Louisiana State Treasurer and editor of the New Orleans Democrat and the New Orleans Times, which titles he merged in 1881 to become the Times-Democrat; F. C. Morehead, a Vicksburg editor and president of the National Cotton Planter's Association, and; Edmund Richardson, who held the largest amount of acreage under cotton in the United States and, with one exception, the largest in the world. In 1882 the National Cotton Planter's Association endorsed the Exposition and in 1883 Congress passed an act creating "The World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition." In April 1883, the National Cotton Planter's Association executive committee chose New Orleans, Louisiana, as the host city. Edmund Richardson was elected president, Samuel Mullen, secretary, and Major Burke assumed the role of general manager.

Securing slightly less than $500,000.00 by early 1884, building began for the exposition's structures only one of which was intended to be permanent. Delays caused the opening date to be pushed back from 1884 December 01 to 1884 December 16 and even then the site was not completed. Reports of the day describe "confusion" and "reprehensible delay in getting the exposition completed and in good running order."¹ Once open, things did not progress smoothly. Not only was the Exposition deeply in debt but also a great deal of ill will had grown up between the exhibitors and managers. On 1885 January 08, a meeting took place to consider financial relief as the Exposition was $200,000.00 in debt and would be $360,000.00 in debt by February. By 1885 February 11, the acrimony between exhibitors and managers reached the point that exhibitors held an "indignation meeting" against the managers. The debt and the unrest were temporarily restrained and the exposition ran its full length. When the Exposition closed on 1885 June 01 it was roughly $470,000.00 in debt. A few years later, Major Burke, Louisiana State Treasurer, newspaper publisher, and the Exposition's General Manager would be indicted for embezzlement and forgery, which charges he would answer from London having already left the state and the country some time before.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

The 65 stereographs in this collection mainly document exteriors and interiors of Exposition structures. There are a few scenes in New Orleans proper and at ferry crossings in the vicinity. Of these 65 stereographs: the Centennial Photographic Company published 61 images; George F. Mugnier, New Orleans, Louisiana, published 2 images; W. M. Chase, Baltimore, Md., published 1 image; and an unnamed photographer/company published 1 image.
